

One of the most unique gifts to give new parents is the gift of your time. During the first few weeks when they are exhausted and frazzled, some home cooked meals, free baby sitting or help cleaning the house are gifts that will be appreciated beyond measure. You don't have to spend much money to give them the best gift of all – you!

Four Fun & Different Baby Gift Ideas

This time when your sister, girlfriend or co-worker has a baby, give them something different and fun. After all, they probably will receive more clothes and toys than they'll know what to do with. These ingenious and memorable gifts will be appreciated by the new parents.

2 Week Dinner Circle - We all know that the first few weeks are so overwhelming that they just go by in one big blur so during this period of adjustment for Mom & Dad, put together a plan for your group of friends to cook dinner and dessert to bring to the family each day. This gift does double duty by relieving Mom of the daily grind of cooking and by giving her a chance to have some adult interaction with her friends. It is a great excuse for you to stop in a make sure that she is doing OK. Depending on how close the friends are, they could stay for dinner and then clean up to do the dishes or a little housework for an extra special treat.

Diaper Service Gift Certificate - When it comes to giving gifts to welcome the new baby to the world, giving the gift of time can be the greatest gift of all. Having a baby can be very stressful and takes a great deal of time. Diaper services can help relieve some of this stress so give the new parents a gift certificate for a week or two of services

BABY GIFTS & GIFT BASKETS

If you have children who are old enough to chip in around the house, the birth of a friend's or relative's baby is an excellent time to get the whole family involved in the gift-giving process. Ask them to take a Saturday to go to the new parent's house to do some yard work or cleaning during the first month of baby's arrival. The new parents will love your family's generosity.
